AT THE TABERNACLE.

Apostle Lorenzo Snow Addresses the Congregation.

HE BEARS A STRONG TESTIMONY

Some Impressions Regarding the Sacrifices Made and Being Made for Conscience Sake.

On Sunday afternoon last, the attendance at the Tabernacle was again large. The congregational singing of the opening hymn,

Praise to the Lord! my heart shall join In work of pleasure, as divine, Now while the flesh is my abode, And when my soul ascend to God.

was entered into by the immense assemblage with spirit and feeling.
Prayer by Elder A. M. Musser.
Singing by the choir of the hymn,

We'll sing, all hail to Jesus' name; Honor and praise we give To Him who died on Calvary's hill, And died that we might live.

APOSTLE LORENZO SNOW, on rising, received the indulgence of the congregation, remarking that his lungs were not in the best condition to allow of his being heard in every part of the large building. His feelings, he said, were peculiar, especially on the first occasion after being released from an eleven months imprisonment in the Utah Penitentiary. As an introduction to his remarks, he read from the eighth chapter of Paul's epistle to the Romans, from the 35th to the 39th verse, inclusive.
Also lines in the opening hymn,

Happy the man whose hopes rely On Israel's God! He made the sky.

He sends the laboring conscience peace And grants the prisoner sweet release.

The speaker hardly knew how to begin, or what to say; he would depend upon the exercise of faith by his hearers. The selections he had read contained principles which he had always tried to carry out in his life, during an active career of over fifty years. If the Saints had verily received the gospel, they must expect to have the same difficulties to encounter, the same obstacles to overcome, as the Saints of old had. When the gospel was received by them in the old countries these points had not been sufficiently taken into consideration. Those who had neglected to take them into consideration, had fallen by the wayside—apostatized, and had exerted their influence to do wrong to the people of God.

Referring to his recent incarceration, Apostle Snow remarked that he had, in the first place, done all in his power to keep out of the Penitentiary; he had used all the wisdom God had given him to that end, but when he found himself there, he found everything very strange.
He had always considered himself an honest, moral, patriotic man; he gloried in loyalty and hoped to see his country grow and increase in strength, he had never been arrested before, and when he found himself in the Penitentiary walls, he could not understand why it was.
He acknowledged that the Lord wished him to travel that path, and he was measurably happy. He realized that if the gospel was true, that Joseph Smith was a true prophet, and that he had a knowledge for himself, and he would consequently devote his entire life to proclaiming that knowledge that others might profit by it. He at one time had a vision, in his early experience in the church, by which he was shown that God had given to His children the same organism He himself possessed, Jesus came into the world and labored and suffered that mankind might receive the same intelligence and wisdom that He and His Father possessed. With this knowledge of Jesus and His mission, he resolved to do the will of God to the best of his ability. The apostles of Jesus' day were martyrs for the gospel's sake; they sacrificed their lives, and the speaker did not think himself any better than those ancients.
He did not wish to avoid sacrifices, but would make them without dishonor to himself. He would prefer not to go back to the Pen; but would go back again a thousand times rather than disgrace the principles he knew to be of God. He had had many chats with the Governor, the latter endeavoring to convert the apostle to his way of thinking and vice versa. The speaker had told his excellency that he didn't care that certain things would be the result of this crusade; but that he knew the result would be the glory and vindication of the Saints in their labor of love, if they would only live according to the knowledge they had. His experience in preaching the plan of salvation, was the result of his knowledge of the truth of the gospel. While his imprisonment for eleven months, as a so-called convict, had been imposed—five months of it—wrongfully, he had no fault to find with the courts, as they had a mission to perform.

Apostle Snow related some of his experiences with prominent persons who had visited him while in the Penitentiary. In his conversation with several leading men, he endeavored to preach the gospel, and regarded himself as having done so, long and loud.

Now, with regard to the future, the speaker continued, the Lord had delivered the Saints spiritually, and the dark outlook which was presented to them financially and physically, disturbed the community more or less, and it was not strange that it should, perhaps more than was necessary, if the Saints properly understood the workings of the Almighty, who held the government in His hand. The purposes of God were the salvation of the human family, and the calling of the Saints was to carry out those purposes, and in doing so they would have to undergo privations and persecutions. He related some hard things as among his experience at the Penitentiary; but he felt charitable and like saying, as Jesus said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." He remarked that at a Conference, six years ago, he made a statement regarding the government of the United States, and as it had been published he would read a portion of it, to show how far he had been wrong then in his prediction.

The conference committee had, after working on the Edmunds-Tucker bill for some time, stricken out many objectionable features. Should it become law, are the Saints prepared for its hardships? he asked. We are becoming accustomed to being wronged and reviled. Our enemies simply requested of us that we merely "obey the law." We had been promised freedom on this condition by those having us in custody, but we could not afford to do or say anything that would dishonor the principles which God had revealed to us. The glories and beauties of the celestial world had been revealed to the Saints, and they would undergo any privation in order to obtain them. The sermons being preached by those in prison would yet yield fruit. After suffering, then come the blessings. They might, possibly, not have followed the commandments of God thoroughly; the Saints had been negligent; they should always be prepared for the changes of life, for the trials and persecutions of the future. Apostle Snow had no language to express the trouble which the Lord had in store for His people and through which they must pass ere they are purified. He cited the case of Job, whose trials and sufferings had been recorded in the Scriptures, as an example of how the Lord tried people in ancient days, and asked what we would think nowadays if tried in a similar manner? Job said, "God hath given and God hath taken away." He was resigned to the will of God. When men had suffered sufficiently, God always ordered affairs for the good of the individual. God's approval and smiles were sufficient to encourage the Saints in their labors, and he earnestly hoped they would merit them.
